Finally scanning with no dongle, additional fees or limitations

(October 13, 2009 – Washington DC) AINS is proud to announce the latest release of ScanXpress™ which is now available to commercial customers for the first time. ScanXpress™ is a well known scanning solution inside the US Federal Government at agencies such as the Housing and Urban Development, the State Department and USAID which deploys the solution in embassies and missions around the world..

ScanXpress™ is robust enough to deploy into production and networked environments including MFDs and it is simple enough to use as a desktop application.

AINS is the first to put the key features that customers want and need in our latest release. This includes functionality such as Bar-coding, OCR, Text & Zonal Indexing, Image Enhancements, Bates Stamping, Quality Assurance, Batch Scanning, Searching, Indexing, Annotation & Markup including redaction, and a built-in document repository. There are no extra modules that customers must purchase to get the features that they want or need.

ScanXpress™ also allows users to direct output files to the desktop, network, e-mail, or 3rd party software such as SharePoint and Documentum in addition to DocViewer (the document repository system that is included with ScanXpress™) in any standard format.

“ScanXpress™ is very intuitive and doesn’t require expensive training” said Richard Palmer of Image World, a scanning bureau located Northern Virginia. “It is a great replacement for expensive over bloated historical software”.

ScanXpress™ features the new Microsoft-inspired user interface and consolidates all the scanning controls in the ribbon strip across the top of the window that easily explains what the program can do.
