Interesting, Informative and Outrageous Stories from the Information Management World

ARMA International Launches New Blog

ARMA International recently launched a new and different blog that covers interesting, alarming, and amusing news from the world of records and information management. The blog, InformationOverload, also serves as an aggregator of top industry blogs covering issues such as e-discovery, information technology, and content management. InformationOverload brings both informative and outrageous stories in the information management world to one central location to keep professionals informed on various topics.

Marilyn Bier, ARMA International's Executive Director, explained, "The blog is a great way for us to improve dialogue with information management stakeholders around the globe. It's not your average information management blog. We feel it's important to keep readers up to date on key information management news stories, as well as the ones further out on the fringe."

Updated regularly, the blog is an ideal way for information management professionals to stay informed. InformationOverload is available at: <http://armablog.typepad.com/informationoverload/>.
